Each stripe as bright as now they wave,

The Spirit of the People and What it

The spirit of the country as gathered from travelers, correspondents and our exchanges, is in the highest degree encouraging. Never was there such a rally to arms as that now going on throughout the loyal states. From Maine to Minnesota the drums are beating and the people are rallying. A gentleman just returned from an extended tour in the West informs us that we can form no proper conception of en masse, as it were, and rushing to the points of defense along the Southern border. Young men and old are going, and they are taking along with them their rifles and their shotguns, their pistols and knives. Around their shoulders swing the old fashioned powder horns full of powder, and the old fashioned leather game pouches full of bullets and shot. Every man is provided with some little home arrangement for carrying rations, and every man has his blanket and over-coat—all provided all on horseback. Their uniforms and arms all on horseback. Their uniforms and arms arms the state of the state o at his own expense or that of his neighbor's. In Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota thousands of these men are going to the Indian grounds, to hunt down and exterminate the treacherous savages who, either at their

And trunks on the wharf, that the citizens had per upon the loyal public mind. And yet it is true that the present hour is the most hopeful one of the war. There is not now a devoted Union man who does not, under the threatening circumstances of the "situation," feel himself more embittered against the rebellion, and more determined in his desire to see it not down the wharf, that the citizens had left in their flight, their thievish propensity about three hundred infantry, all but sixty of whom were raw recruits wheel be had gathered up on the route. And this is the feeling of the people of the loyal States everywhere. The lides of invasion by the rebel hordes who have forced their way to the border, has stung the people to very quick, as it were, and the hitherto quiet current of their particitism has been suddenly lashed into a fary, that will never spend itself until the

This is a very significant state of public feeling. The North will never yield this contest. Nothing is plainer than their intense determination on this point. Patriotism and passion, now most acrimoniously blended, combine to inspire the people ancw, and "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon" is the cry of the class of men who have taken arms in their hands. It is in value for any rebel sympathiser to solace himself over the recent successes of the conspirators. Let every such person understand that these reverses to our arms have but one effect, viz:—To make his principles more intolerable in the eyes of the people. And let him nuderstand that each of the little temporary successes of which we read from day to day, has but the effect to intensify this feeling. feeling. The North will never yield this

We have no other opinion of the issue of the great contest than this, viz:—that through all this trial—this sore trial which we are undergoing—an all wise Providence will so conduct the progress of the war that it will purge the nation utterly of all seed of future rebellion. The war for the unity of this nation is being fought once for all and forever. Had we succeeded uninterraptically from the start there is every probability that we should have achieved that we should have achieved but a very superficial triumph. The South has got to be thoroughly conquered and subjugated to the authority of the Federal

This nation will not die. Its race is only begun. Its civilization has been but put in play upon the world. It is only in the early morning of a long life. It is now straggling with a disease that has been in its system from the beginning, and which has grown with its growth and strengthened with its strength until the hour for the mastery of the disease or of the nationhas come. As the Almighty has purpose in his plans—as the work of our fathers was not the result of chance—as it is true and divine that man is capable of self-government—so
